TEACHING

Department of English, Yale University

Instructor of Record

ENGL 114: “Animals, Animality, & the Human,” Spring 2019 & Fall 2016

A first-year writing seminar of my own design. By analyzing and discussing argumentative prose from a range of disciplines, students learn the fundamentals of college writing. Themes and topics include animal consciousness; animal rights; constructions of race, gender, sexuality, and Indigenous identity; and climate change and food insecurity. Authors include John James Audubon, Charles Darwin, Rachel Carson, and Charlotte Coté.

Instructor of Record

ENGL 115: “Homesick: Nostalgia in Literature,” Fall 2018

A first-year literature seminar of my own design. By analyzing texts belonging to a range of genres, modes, and historical periods, students learn to craft well-argued critical essays. Our discussions explore the comforts and the personal and political hazards of nostalgia in texts like The Odyssey, William Shakespeare’s Pericles, and Viet Thanh Nguyen’s The Refugees.

Digital Humanities Teaching Fellow

ENGL 136: “Vampires, Castles, and Werewolves,” Spring 2017 (with Prof. Heather Klemann)

A literature survey lecture course for which I led one seminar discussion section. Major authors included Bram Stoker, Angela Carter, Mary Shelley, and Horace Walpole. With the support of a competitive Digital Humanities Teaching Fellowship, I collaborated with staff at Yale’s Digital Humanities Laboratory to design a set of assignments that combined literary criticism with methods like distant reading, network visualization, and GIS mapping.

Yale College Writing Center, Center for Teaching and Learning, Yale University

Writing Partner, Sept. 2017-Aug. 2018

Regular tutoring meetings and drop-in sessions with high school students and English language learners, as well as with the undergraduates of Yale College.

Faculty of Continuing Education & Training, Seneca College (Toronto)

Instructor of Record

EAC 273FM: “Introduction to Children’s Literature,” Fall 2012 & Spring 2013 (two terms)

A hybrid online and classroom course, teaching the basics of college writing and literary analysis through the study of children’s literature. In-person class sessions consisted of short lectures, group activities, and individual tutoring and consultation.

Department of English, McGill University

Teaching Assistant

ENGL 308: “Elizabethan Drama,” Spring 2012 (with Prof. Wes Folkerth)

An upper-level seminar on early modern drama by authors other than William Shakespeare. I provided a series of guest lectures, led small discussion groups, and graded assignments.

ENGL 315: “Protean Shakespeare,” Fall 2011 (with Prof. Paul Yachnin)

An upper-level lecture course exploring William Shakespeare’s plays through the lens of change and conversion. I led two discussion sections of 20-25 students each.
