TEACHING

Department of Historical Studies, University of Toronto Mississauga

Instructor of Record

HIS210H5F: “Introduction to Digital Humanities: The Archive in the Anthropocene,” Fall 2019
 This course invites students to use DH tools such as TimelineJS, Voyant, ArcGIS Online, and Omeka in order to explore major topics in environmental history and ecocriticism. Questions include: how does climate change demand that we transform raw data into meaningful narratives with the power to shift public opinion? What role can DH play in visualizing this information, or shaping it into new arguments and stories?

Department of English, Yale University

Instructor of Record

ENGL 114: “Animals, Animality, & the Human,” Spring 2019 & Fall 2016

A first-year writing seminar of my own design. By analyzing and discussing argumentative prose from a range of disciplines, students learn the fundamentals of college writing. Themes and topics include animal consciousness; animal rights; constructions of race, gender, sexuality, and Indigenous identity; and climate change and food insecurity.

Instructor of Record

ENGL 115: “Homesick: Nostalgia in Literature,” Fall 2018

A first-year literature seminar of my own design. By analyzing texts belonging to a range of genres, modes, and historical periods, students learn to craft well-argued critical essays. Our discussions explore the comforts and the personal and political hazards of nostalgia in texts like The Odyssey, William Shakespeare’s Pericles, and Viet Thanh Nguyen’s The Refugees.

Digital Humanities Teaching Fellow

ENGL 136: “Vampires, Castles, and Werewolves,” Spring 2017 (with Prof. Heather Klemann)

A literature survey lecture course for which I led one seminar discussion section. I collaborated with staff at Yale’s Digital Humanities Laboratory to design assignments that combined literary criticism with distant reading, network visualization, and GIS mapping.

Poorvu Center for Teaching and Learning, Yale University

Writing Partner, Sept. 2017-Aug. 2018

Regular tutoring meetings and drop-in sessions with local high school students, English language learners, and undergraduate students in Yale College.

Faculty of Continuing Education & Training, Seneca College, Toronto

Instructor of Record

EAC 273FM: “Introduction to Children’s Literature,” Fall 2012 & Spring 2013 (two terms)

A hybrid online and classroom course, teaching the basics of college writing and literary analysis through the study of children’s literature. In-person class sessions consisted of short lectures, group activities, and individual tutoring and consultation.

Department of English, McGill University

Teaching Assistant

ENGL 308: “Elizabethan Drama,” Spring 2012 (with Prof. Wes Folkerth)

An upper-level seminar on early modern drama by authors other than William Shakespeare. I provided a series of guest lectures, led small discussion groups, and graded assignments.

ENGL 315: “Protean Shakespeare,” Fall 2011 (with Prof. Paul Yachnin)

An upper-level lecture course exploring William Shakespeare’s plays through the lens of change and conversion. I led two discussion sections of 20-25 students each.
